For children in northern Uganda,
it isn't hide-and-seek.

It's life or death.

This isn't a game. In northern Uganda a terrorist army abducts innocent children and forces them to kill or be killed. To avoid capture, thousands of children must leave their families every night and walk up to 10 miles seeking safety. No child should live in such fear.

Join us in urging President Bush and Congress to help bring peace to Uganda and protect these vulnerable children caught in the crossfire.
